How Don Juan Miguel de la Corda Sought a Wife

IN A PRETTY NEW MEXICO GIRL

He Wouldn't Take "No" for an Answer. His Offers of Love Refused the Plery Brazilian Resorted to Force to Win the Girl-Raises a Band and Attacks Her Pather's flouse-The Coveted Girl Uses a Revolver with Deadly Effect.

city. She is pretty enough to drive a metropolitan exquisite to the commission of extravagances, and it will be easily comprehended that her charm for the lonely ranchman or the wild sheepherder is next to irresistible.

Miss Dow, however, never found any difficulty in getting rid of her lovers until she met Don Juan Miguel de la Charda, a fierce and even haughty Brazilian, who claims a lineage as old as the everlasting hills. Don Juan is dark, not Ill-looking and full of determinathe evertasting hills. Den Juan is dark, not ill-looking and full of determina-tion. He met Miss Dow one glorious afternoon when she was riding a favor-ite horse, and from that hour he could think of nothing but her superb figure, her "brenze brown eyes" and her, lus-teous huir.

The don's courting was swift an to the point. There was no difficulty about securing an introduction, and before he had known her for a quarter of an hour the impetuous Bebuillan asked Sallie to become his wife. She laughed at him, and he began to curse. Then Miss Sallie became alarmed, and, altering her tone, begged for time. She said she must consult her forter. "To-night," said the drazilian, "I will call for my answer."

Sallie rode swiftly for her father's house, and in a few words told her story. She was aure, she said, the man was mad, and as for marrying him, she declared she would as soon think of mating with the Old Boy himself. Dow per-received Don Juan courteously when the latter called that evening, and listened to him with a fine show of patience. The Bruzilian wasted no words. "Senor," he said, "your daughter pleases me and I will take her for my wife. I return to my ranch in the morn.

"Senor," he said, "your daughter pleases me and I will take her for my wife. I return to my ranch in the morning. I will now go and get a priest and we can be married immediately."
Sailie's father was naturally somewhat nonplussed by such winged words. He told the don that he did not know him well enough to consider him in that light and advised that the discussion end right there.

that light and advised that the discus-sion end right there.

Don Juan flew into a terrible passion and declared that he would take the girl without her father's consent. But Saille's father gripped the don by the collar and threw him out of the front door with so much energy and good will that it was some moments before the teeth of the noble Brazilian ceased to teeth of the noble Brazilian ceased to rattle. He went away, however, vowing that he would have Sallie if he had to burn the house about the stern parent's ears, to get her.

Now, instead of keeping his bitter anger locked in his breast, De la Corda went about the country publishing his intention of taking the girl by force. Mr. Dow, however, was not to be caught napping and promptly fortified his roof tree and armed his servants with Winchesters and his daughter with a couple napping and promptly fortified his roll tree and armed his servants with Win-chesters and his daughter with a couple of revolvers.

"Keep one of those for the crazy Bra-zilian, my dear," said he to Salile, and the girl marked Dow's name on the gun and put it away in a safe place.

Meanwhile lave and mortified vanity were waging a fearful warfare in the Brazilin's breast. No woman had ever dired to resist his suit before. He found little difficulty in enlisting a band of reckless sheep herders under his banner and advanced upon Mr. Dow's house under cover of the night.

The sheep herders were promised all the booty they could capture. They surrounded the house and called upon Dow to produce the girl, threatening him with death and his house with the brand if he refused to comply.

But Merchant Dow had secured the co-operation of a few of his nearest teighbors, and these, with a half dozen servants who wage devotedly attached teighbors, and there, with a half dozen servants who were devotedly attached to him and his daughter, constituted the party of defense. Dow's orders were to await the word of command and then burn powder without stint. De la Corda rede into battle on a mustang. Although he still treasured over in the disk with the brakan tangled in the wreck of hoofs and trappings. When Miss Salile saw her suitor's downful she quickly grasped the revolver marked with his name and tried a shot at him. Don Juan still lives but the mustang will neverilimp orazin.

Matters now began to take on a serious look. Irritated at the shot which had momentarily disabled de la Corda, the sheep herders began a rapid fire on the house. One of the Dow servants fell, mortally wounded, behind the window he was guarding. Several of the neighbors lost their heads and forgot to return the fire of the enemy. But Mr. Dow forgot nothing. His gun spokerapidly and with terrible effect. One man one the don's side was killed outrish by a hullet from the enraged father's rifle, and several others fell on the field badly hurt.

The Brazillan, sided by a dozen of the more desperate spirits of his command, now made a dash for the front door of the house and began battering at the heavy woodwork with the butte of their rifler. The fire of the defenders could not reach them there, and every moment, the door ounked to its fall under the fain of the heavy blows showered upon it.

There was no time to be lost, and Dow quieldly mustered his foress on a stuir landing which commanded the main entrance to the house, and yet did not leave the rear entirely unprotected. When the door went down the manaders found themselves facing a belching volcano of fire and shot. No wonder they faitered for a moment, but when Don Juan, elubiding his musket, rushed up the stairs with dare devil courage, they faitered for imment, but when Don Juan, elubiding his musket, rushed up the stairs with dare devil courage of the followers of Don Juan.

A NEW DISCOVERY BY THE SHAKERS.

For more than a hundred years, the Mount Leban on Shahors have studied the cultivation of medlethal plants and sought to extract from them their healting essences. Their dabor has not yet been spent in vain. They have made a discovery that will prove a blessing to mankind. It consists of a cordial that causes immediate relief in cases of indigestion. The importance of this discovery will be apparent when we realise that nearly mine-tenths of our suffering are caused by despepsia or indigestion. Nearly every person you meet has this digestive trouble in some of its varied forms—sick headache, distress after eating, pain and fullness in the chest after eating, palpitation of the heart, etc., are but symptoms of indigestion. To relieve these sufferings has been the study of the Shakers, and they have succeeded. The reason the Shaker Digestive Cordial has such an immediate and salurary effect is that it causes the food vaten to be digested before there is time for it to ferment and sour on the stomach. When the food is so digested it gives strength and valurative Cordial is so prompt in its action that the very first dose will have a percentially favorable result. It gives immediate relef.

recent averages and the dealings were unusually well distributed. The initial stimulus to the market was received from London whence general advances in the prices of American stocks were reported and from the execution of liberal arbitrage buying in this market for foreign account. The purchases extended to the usually less active securities. The specialities attained considerable prominence in the dealings, while the railway shares received a full measure of attention. Selling stocks on a large scale were noted at intervals, but the strength of the market was unimpaired and the highest figures of the day were recorded at the close. Honds were decidedly strong, with quite a number of issues traded in. The aggregate sales were strong and higher. Governments were strong and higher.
